Salzburg Academy on Media and Global Change

The Salzburg Academy on Media and Global Change builds digital literacies and engagement around critical challenges for society. Its annual three-week program connects young media innovators across disciplines to produce multimedia tools and reframe curricula and research. Founded in 2007, it has over 900 alumni and faculty from 60 participating institutions worldwide.

UPCOMING PROGRAM
The Cost of Disbelief: Fracturing Societies and the Erosion of Trust (July 16 to August 2, 2019)

RECENT PROGRAMS
Re-Imagining Journalism: News and Storytelling in an Age of Distrust (2018)
Voices Against Extremism: Media Responses to Global Populism (2017)
Migration, Media and Global Uncertainty (2016)

For three weeks each summer, a truly international group of emerging media practitioners – journalists, filmmakers, activists, storytellers, and advocates – study, work and live together at Schloss Leopoldskron, Salzburg, Austria.

Left: The Media Academy features a mix of plenary presentations and discussions on a range of media-related topics and immersive workshops on game design, mobile storytelling, immersive design, and community engagement, as well as faculty-led group project work and research.
Right: Guest speakers in 2017 included then-sitting Justice Anthony Kennedy of the US Supreme Court.
IMPACT AND OUTCOMES

Each year, students work with faculty and industry practitioners to create media processes and products focused on social impact and civic empowerment. These projects have ranged from media literacy curriculum plans – implemented by several partner schools, co-created multimedia publications – 2018’s Persist: New Ideas for Journalism in an Age of Distrust, and “playbooks” – 2017’s Re-Action – A DIY Playbook for Building a Better World, to proposing innovative projects and consulting for the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

In 2014, Salzburg Academy students devised proposals for the UNDP ahead of the implementation of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) on how gamification could be used to address the challenges around youth unemployment and livelihoods, climate change, human rights, and corruption.

Left: Inspired by the Salzburg Academy, long-serving faculty member Jad Melki founded the Media and Digital Literacy Academy of Beirut in 2013. Several faculty and alumni have since taken part in the MDLAB – the first program of its kind in the Middle East.

Right: Academy faculty have collaborated on multiple research projects and publications, including Mediated Communities: Civic Voices, Empowerment And Media Literacy In The Digital Era, edited by faculty member Moses Shumow and with contributions from ten more faculty.

TESTIMONIALS

“Coming here has completely flipped my perspective and made me realize that I have such a Western-centric view on the media... It’s made me look at everything I consume in a different way. Being in close proximity with people from different countries, that have different backgrounds, different ethnicities, different religions has made me contemplate other perspectives.”

MAYA PARCHMENT, BOURNEMOUTH UNIVERSITY, UK

“I had the opportunity of meeting so many enthusiastic and passionate young people from all over the world, tackling issues concerning immigration... I never really had considered whether Kenya had such a problem before... It was an eye-opener for me. It made me understand that the way we tell our stories really effects how policy is made. Media has the power of engaging people.”

JEREMIAH KIPAINOI, DAYSTAR UNIVERSITY, KENYA

“Every person who ever has a chance [to attend the Salzburg Media Academy] should take it. It is life changing, because it’s not only about what you learn – you start thinking about things differently, you discuss topics you didn’t think you would discuss with different people with different backgrounds [and] you also get to create prototypes about projects that might change the journalism field.”
