

General Information

Defining Communication Education for the 21st Century

Established in 1899, the Moody College of Communication at The University of Texas at Austin is the largest and most comprehensive communication college in the country. Each of the Moody College's five departments – Advertising and Public Relations, Communication Sciences and Disorders, Communication Studies, Journalism, and Radio-Television-Film – features nationally recognized researchers and receives consistently high rankings across the nation.

The Moody College of Communication provides connections to the various industries it represents through its diverse faculty, strong alumni base and industry partnerships. Its new building, the Belo Center for New Media, builds on these assets and promotes new models for communication research and education for the 21st century.

Moody College of Communication faculty conduct leading research and are renowned for their teaching and scholarship. For example, six Moody College faculty members are in the Academy of Distinguished Teachers, and the Communication Sciences and Disorders program has the best bi-lingual/bi-cultural program in the country – setting standards for the industry.

The Moody College of Communication attracts top students and provides opportunities to conduct relevant research in a challenging, yet collaborative hands-on environment.

Examples of opportunities for practical experience include the East Austin Stories project, the Semester in Los Angeles program, the UT Speech and Hearing Clinic, pre-graduate school internships, as well as numerous other internship opportunities.

The Student Advising unit is dedicated to serving undergraduate students. Under the direction of Mark Bernstein, a team of professional academic advisors, program coordinators, career services professionals and support staff are dedicated to helping undergraduate students with academic support services and information.

Students come into contact with the Student Advising Office for student orientation activities, advising regarding their scholastic interests, registration advising, degree counseling, certification for graduation, and a host of other services. Communication Career Services provides career development and job search assistance to students and alumni of the Moody College of Communication.
